Your creativity CREATES new money

People struggle with the realization that creating fiction creates jobs. Always.

In this miserable economy, I think we as readers and writers need to take a look at the powerful economic force one person with an idea and the guts to get it out there can be.

So I've written the article Money From Nothing: The Economic Value of Writing Original Fiction to discuss the power of the individual writer at every level to create economic good—including the value of writing unpublished fiction, as well as the good done by the writer who publishes either commercially OR via self-publishing.

Read the article there: Talk HERE about how you're a force for good in the world.
