Sam remembers something that happened in his past. It doesn't sound like much, but It was. It gave me huge insight into the character, and allowed me to introduce a tiny slice of his extraordinary past into the story.

It was a reflective bit, too… pacing-wise, a moment away from what has to this point been a pretty tight, action-filled, and destructive opener.

I'm pleased with what I got.

If you're playing Write A Book With Me on level 2, you're only in for 500 words. I got rolling and ran a bit over.

So. How's your writing going today?
