The Deadline Crunch

Okay. So I've done 1800+ words tonight, and there are going to be a whole lot more before I'm done. What I'm writing is already 5622 words long, and I still have a couple of critical elements to include by tonight.

Problem. My writing tonight is non-fiction. My two beta testers are starting into How To Revise Your Novel next Monday, and in between the hospital stuff, Margaret and I have been working madly to get the course software debugged—and now that it's done, I'm wrapping up Lesson 2 tonight because I MUST have a buffer between myself and the lessons students are taking, in case I get sick. But I still have a lot of stuff that has to go into the course before next Monday.

Two lessons is all I had for the whole insane Think Sideways run.

Two lessons is evidently all I'm going to have as a buffer for HTRYN, too.

Not much in the way of sick time.

That's my night.

How's your writing coming along?
