

9:38 a.m. and I finished

By Holly Lisle

2028 words. And I really like what I got. A nice bit of misdirection that has everyone but the heroine convinced the villain is in custody. With good reason – they have all sorts of great evidence that seems to prove it.

But false good news is the precursor to the real bad news – and that will be coming tomorrow.

I'm excited, the story is flowing well, and I'm done for the day. I love morning.
