

A chink in the armor of the never-ending migraines?

By Holly Lisle

I'm not here. It's Saturday, and I take Saturdays off, so I'm not here.

Which is the perfect way to note that I haven't had a migraine in a week. It has also been not here.

Matt did a bunch of research, and about two weeks ago, we started trying something he came up with to fix this (after trying everything else except medication).

It took about three days to notice results, and another few days for the migraine to go. And after one accidental encounter with the problem substance, I had a brutal migraine the next day...but that cleared by getting back to what I was doing that was working.

Not ready to say more. One week is not enough to declare causation.

But correlation is there.

Going back to my day off.
