

A flower for Margaret

Use this link to go to Margaret's creativity game.

As requested, I scrawled a three-minute flower on the back of an envelope.

I'm not sure where she's going with this, but her exercises and games tend to be interesting.

I THINK I know what she's working toward here. But I'm interested to see what results she gets.

You can play, too. Be sure to read her directions. I used pen rather than pencil because, A) I have a ton of pens on my desk, and I'd have to hunt through the kid's school supplies to find a pencil, and B) I don't like pencil anyway, because it permits erasure and second thoughts, while at the same time erasing the past.

But on the chance that what she's planning actually requires pencil, my biggest reason was that I'm working, and all I have on hand and convenient are pens. ☐
