

Army had a half-day... #WABWM

By Holly Lisle

9:27 AM

Today is a family holiday, so on my schedule I have the day off. However, I have a few hours to myself starting now, and I'll get as much of the write-in done as I can in the time I have.

Yesterday, I didn't quite make it through the read-through of the nine chapters I'd typed in earlier. I found a couple issues that had to be addressed in order to keep the story consistent with it's much better ending, so I didn't show any official progress on my progress bar, in spite of the fact that I did a lot of work.

And I'm adding something in this revision—a theme line. A written-out sentence of the part of the theme (or subtheme) I want each chapter to move forward.

Not a lot of time today, though, so...

Onward!

I'm enjoying reading your progress, by the way. Haven't commented, but it's cool to see other projects coming together.

Write on...

(P.S. The headline is a quote from Arrested Development, the second most rewatchable and quotable TV show in history. The first being Firefly, of course.)
