

Back, with words

By Holly Lisle

Day before yesterday, I got 2303 new words. Yesterday, 1073. In that same two-day period, I had most of my free time taken up by dealing with author's rights problems with an article of mine. Of that, I can finally say that it was resolved to my satisfaction, as of this morning, and the less said, the better.

Today, I'm starting in with the place where I left off yesterday with Baanraak, who is on Kerras, the first of the dead upworlds, discovering traces of Lauren's handiwork there. I'll do another thousand or so words on that scene, then move on to Pete helping Molly and Lauren face up to the fact that they're going to have to bring the Sentinels into their private project. Today, at least, I get to focus exclusively on my writing.
