Are you ready to write series fiction?

written by Holly
April 3, 2017
By Holly Lisle

People have been waiting for my expansion of my How to Write A Series class to come back. Until now, it wasn't back because in its previous version, I went way down the rabbit hole of too much information, and I had to figure out what to keep and what to dump.

I also had to get rid of all the damn video. The lessons this time through will not be me talking. They will be you reading. Writers read. It's how we got to be writers in the first place.

The objective of a class on how to write a series is, in fact, to get the damn series written and published, on time and on budget.

This morning I dug out all the questions folks asked me about series fiction (that I could find, anyway).

And I laid out my plan for the class. You can see a thumbnail of the diagram below – if you click it, you can see the big version, which is pretty big (if you're on a cell phone or tablet, it may still be unreadable. If so, I apologize.