

Down to the Closing Stretch – 1473 words today – and gonna run over 90,000 (but not, I hope, by much)

God, stuff clicked today. Pieces from earlier chapters told me why they were there, my MC came up with this great solution to a big problem that introduced her to some big secrets her dead grandmother's lawyer has been conveniently failing to mention...

And I know my ending.

It's going to be big. Messy. Fun.

And it's going to need more words than I have left to land exactly on 90,000... but I'm okay with that. The extra is going to be SO worth it!

And I'm sitting here writing about a snowy February day (planned several months ago when I started writing this book) while watching a snowy February day outside my window.

How cool is that?
