

Finally back to work

By Holly Lisle

Writing of any variety hasn't been going too well the last few days. Stress doesn't go away when things start looking better, because the possibility that they'll get worse again always exists. But I'm making nice progress on the type-in of the Green Magic proposal right now. It feels good to be writing again.

I finally got a desktop client to work with my weblog, too—the WordPressDash widget. I've never bothered with widgets—always found them kind of silly and pointless. But WordPressDash makes it possible for me to post to the weblog without having to open anything or log in. The reason I had so many posts the first year I started blogging was because I had my desktop client open and I reported progress as I was writing. It was a lot of fun, and kept me going. I might find myself sliding back into that format.

Oh, and I know what next Friday's Snippet is going to be. An excerpt from the Starving Rat Scene in HAWKSPAR.
