So the hero has been shot in the head, the killer is breaking down the door into the heroine's no-other-way-out hideout, and suddenly I remember the set-up I did for the maze three or four chapters back, when everything was still all happy-happy ...

And now the maze and the stuff I planned for that is in there, too. Hah! About half the way through, but it's been rough going this morning.

Hard to believe I still have about 20,000 words to go until this story is done.
