

Four AM headache woke me

By Holly Lisle

Not the best way to start a workday – but I got up, got some Tylenol and aspirin, and lay around for the better part of an hour until it went away. Since I couldn't get back to sleep, though, I got up and got to work. Making good headway now – I'm going to push for a few more words today. I'd like to finish the second chapter and get as much of the third as I can before I run out of writing time. (I'd love to complete the third chapter. I'd have to write about five thousand words today to do it, and while I've done that plenty of times, I haven't done it in the amount of time I'll have before the bounding boy breaks loose.)

We'll see. Off to attempt to pile up massive wordcounts.
