✖ I received my copy of Create A Character Clinic yesterday. It arrived promptly, in excellent condition, and the quality was exceptional. The cover artwork is on good, sturdy stock, very glossy, and the colors came out rich and well-separated.

✖ The text is crisp, too, and the ringbound binding is inset deeply enough that the pages, which are of good-quality paper, should not tear out even with heavy use.

✖ I was worried about the interior illustrations. I had to do them in grayscale, rather than the color that I used in the e-book version, and I was afraid that they would be muddy and hard to read. I was pleasantly surprised to find that they had printed very well, though I think I may redo the whole lot in black and white when I redo this. The colors were useful—the grayscale really isn't, and I think I'd prefer crisp lines.

✖ Why will I be going back to redo this instead of putting it on sale now?

Well, there was a tiny little problem with the interior text, you see. It all looks like this. Every word, every page number, every chapter heading and bullet.

..... Sigh .....

I'm off this morning to see how to fix this.
