

Got up at six this morning

By Holly Lisle

Hit the keyboard hard, and by ten, had my 2000 words for the day, plus change. Finished the “sex-in-the-doctors’-overnight-room” scene, which turned out to be pretty hot, with some nice funny touches to lighten things up. Moved my protagonists back home, where disaster awaited.

And I could have kept going, but tomorrow I get to write the disaster, and I’m looking forward to that, too.

I need to make it a point to roll out of bed at six every day. Things go so much better when I do.
