

Happy Old Year. Good stuff coming.

By Holly Lisle

Time and work have devoured this week.

I've been writing HTRYN lessons, putting together some internet stuff with my father-in-law, working toward my New Year's resolution, getting the Official Grand Opening of How To Revise Your Novel ready, and trying to relax. I gave up on that last pretty early on, really, and this has been another long week with no breaks, and no fiction.

But.

HTRYN opens on January 2nd at 12 noon EST, and you'll be able to register for class up until January 9th at 12 noon. After that, it's going to be quite a while before I offer the class again, because, as you'll find out tomorrow, I'm going to be working on other things.

In the meantime, while the HTRYN scholarships have landed on the back burner, they're not forgotten. You can vote for, comment on, or still create and enter an entry in the HTRYN Scholarship Contest here.

I hope the end of your old year is wonderful, and leads to a 2010 that is better than you could ever imagine.

I'll see you again in 2010.
