

I don't like the state of the world right now.

By Holly Lisle

Honestly, I don't know ANYONE who likes the state of the world right now. Not a single person. And I've been wanting to write something about this, but I have not had an inch of breathing room for blogging all month.

But I was looking for something I'd written about people getting paid for their work this morning, and tripped over an article I wrote in 2005.

In which I said the same damn thing I've been wanting to say for months. The fact that EVERYTHING has changed since 2005, and that NOTHING has changed since 2005, made this article both gratifying and deeply and disturbingly creepy.

So something I have only done once before, I think: Here's a replay of an old blog post.
