

I'm writing

Less than five hours of sleep (again), but the story pulled me in.

The Air Force Kid is on leave, and going to be here later today to visit for a few days, before he goes to hang out with his sister, and then travels some more to see friends all the way on the other side of the country. Then, of course, he ships out for a minimum of nine months to one of the places in the world you least want your kid to be.

I'm trying not to think about that. Taandu monsters and unlighted caverns and trouble that finds two hiding girls are easier things.

I won't be posting again until Wednesday or Thursday. Taking some time off to spend with the Kid.
