Into the new year: Words for 2017

By Holly Lisle

The song that means the most to me today...

And a new poem...

One View From Shadow

One stands upon dark winter's sill And shudders at the gathering gloom The candles gutter from a gust That chills the room

One at the banquet fears to breathe
And silent and unmoving stands
For Time might hear and make her leave
And still her hands

Ten thousand voices in her head Are frozen now in breathless fear Stories untold cannot be read No one will hear

The clock ticks on as shadow spreads As winter falls, and cold congeals The one pushed into shadow dreads What time reveals

Which stories now will live or die Which tales will to the banquet bring Their secrets for the guests to whom It is still spring

The shadows gather close but won't

Silence the stories pressed by night The words will come until they don't...

One lifts her pen to write

Holly Lisle - Dec. 28, 2016

In memory of my sister, Julie.

Contents © Holly Lisle. https://hollylisle.com All Rights Reserved