Today's words went well. I love the ending I got.

I already know the revision on this one is going to be big – but everything in it now can wait until all five books are done in first draft.

Starting tomorrow, I'm going to begin outlining the third book, using the process I've used for the first two – something that, once I've done five books with it, I'll be adding in as an advanced level for How to Write a Novel. (Gotta figure out what the bugs are before I suggest anyone else try this…)

Today, though?

Today I got the right ending.

I saved the cat.

I made myself laugh.

And my little Ohio town just got a bit weirder.

THAT? That is an awesome writing day.
