

My word meter's broken

By Holly Lisle

One of the parts of the site that didn't survive the transfer was my old Geeklog weblog, which was just sitting in a back corner of the site minding its own business. I kept it back there because I'd installed Margaret Fisk's WIP wordcount meter into it, and it was easier just to use it as it was than to do a reinstall on a separate database.

But now...no progress meter. Aaaagh!

I have the Scrivener one which at least keeps me focused, but there's something about getting the word count for the day posted publicly that makes it easier to get in and do the next day's words.

I'm plugging along on Moonroads. Not the progress I would have liked for today, but better than none.
