

Not Dead. Definitely Swamped

By Holly Lisle

I hadn't planned on the week following registration for How To Think Sideways being a week of troubleshooting all the many things that broke on the system software; thought we'd tested everything, but you only think that until a course goes live and real students start taking it.

Anyway, this week I'm playing catch-up writing lessons. Didn't get a newsletter out yesterday, didn't get a handful of other things up and running, either. And am 600+ emails behind again. That's probably going to get worse before it gets better.

The lessons are wonderful to write, though, so my work process for the next few months is all stuff I love. And thanks to copious notes, I'm making steady progress.

C has started nagging at me though—I have to write that book. Soon. It's gotten so good inside my head I have to tell it.
