I had some words in there already, and reworked the crap out of this random “dark and stormy night” thing I threw against the wall... last week? Earlier.

Dunno. But what I got today gives me something pretty good to think about, because A) the story now starts with a bang. And B) this morning I discovered that someone important to my MC is missing... and there’s a smoking crater...

Something awful has happened to (or possibly just close to) a major character, and had given me a direction for the story, and a compelling beginning question to pursue.

I did not expect any of this.

BUT... Now that I have accomplished something good on the book, and now that I have something for the day that I can look at with some happiness... I’ll go back to working on the website.
