The R&R last weekend, plus the chance to rethink my approach to the final chapters of Create A World Clinic, have helped me tremendously with the progress of the course. I'd gotten bogged down in minutia, and stepping back and asking myself not HOW I world build, but WHY I world build, got me back on track. Finished the Container Universes chapter today, will start into Knowable Universes tomorrow.

I'm 5000 words over my intended link, and am probably still looking at another 10K to 15K before completion, but it's lovely to see the progress bar stretching again.

If you want to receive EarlyBird notification when the course goes live, you can sign up here. This is the HTTS Boot Camp list, so if you're already on it, you'll receive early notice without signing up again.

This Saturday, I'm going to get back on track by writing and producing the next How To Think Sideways Quick Fix: I think the next one is #18 (but am on the wrong computer right now to verify that.) In any case, during the Epic Site Update Slog, everything but the site work fell by the wayside.

And in the next couple of days, I'm going to put together a brief coupon sale for the books and courses on How To Think Sideways. More on that later, though.
