Progress on World Clinic and 7-Day Crash Revision #wabwm

written by Holly
January 15, 2013
By Holly Lisle

Pretty decent day yesterday, in spite of the persistent headaches and intermittent icepick migraines.

Got 1380 words on Create A World Clinic, and did some additional organization and structuring to make sure it will be easy to use, and got a lot of the backend built for the 7-Day Crash Revision Workshop.

"Building backend" is setting up pages, doing course layout for clarity and ease of use, setting up every single download as a button…things like that. I'm building documentation and a checklist at the same time, so the next time I do it, it won't be so difficult. Putting together this little course is teaching me the process ahead of setting up HTTS Ultra.

Still have to build all the worksheets for 7-Day Crash-Revision Workshop. I'm adapting it from its original form be a little broader in scope, and it'll be 100% upgradeable to HTRYN for folks who need the full in-depth process.

Onward.