Yesterday was a bit more chaotic than usual, and between a number of things coming at me from different directions, and a replay of the damned vertigo, I remembered to let the winner of the redraw for the final prize know, but forgot to announce it.

So... Tiny little drum-roll...

Pomegranate won the drawing for the fifth signed Create a Character Clinic.

Congratulations, and thank you for supporting me on Ko-Fi.

I'll gather mailing supplies, and get all the prizes out to their winners as quickly as I can.

8 fiction writing hours per week

TWO paid hour of fiction writing per writing day (Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday), at $20/hour before taxes. If you're paying self-employment tax, the AFTER money is a lot less. This funding works out to roughly $640/month (pre-tax) most months.

 89% of $640 goal

I'll also note that I'm now 89% of the way to reaching my second goal, which is funding eight hours of fiction writing a week, at $20/hour. This is two hours a day, four days a week, and comes out to $640/month.

How did I come to that hourly rate? Rounded down, it's what I made working as an RN in 1992, when I hung up my cap and decided to write full time.

It seemed like a good place to start.
