The Still-Gone Update

Here’s where I am: My brother-in-law did great through the first half of the procedures and surgeries to remove the massive hemangioma in his brain. That was Wednesday and Thursday. He goes through the identical set of procedures this Wednesday and Thursday to get the other half. We’ve been at the hospital every day, and will be there for him next week as well.

So I won’t be here. We have one other huge thing we have to get through, too, and that could eat most of May. I’m hoping for a return to normalcy after that.

I apologize for my continuing absence. I miss talking with you.
