

Tricky bits

By Holly Lisle

Falling back into the writing yesterday was tough – and I'd actually gone to bed with little done. Thanks to ending up sick, however, I got a lot more done than I thought I would; I got back up and manages to do six pages of an insert demonstrating the effects of magic on Earth as it rebounds up from a war six worlds downworld, by tracking it through the other worlds before it hits.

I spent a great deal of time researching for small cut-scenes – the problem was that I quickly ran out of natural disasters and needed some new ones, but of very specific sorts. The internet is great for research of this sort.

I like the new material, and along with it managed to get a nice chunk of revising done. Sometimes it pays to feel too bad to sleep.
