

Typing done, and the magnificent F11 key

By Holly Lisle

Okay – the outline is typed in in by-character form. Now I need to start the cut-and-paste, drag-and-drop process of making it all fit into a single storyline. Don't know why I couldn't get through this by spreading the cards out on the floor. That usually works; it's a visual process that almost always makes sense for me. This time I just couldn't get things to jell. So I'll go at it from another angle.

And, oh, Opera, the Wonder Browser ... when you toggle the F11 key, it moves you between full-screen mode and browser-frame mode. So if you're on a site where you're going to be for a while, you can eliminate the browser entirely and just work on the site – for me, it's great for the community. All the screen real estate is suddenly wide-open, everything fits, and it's pretty. And if I need the browser again, F11 snaps it back into place.

God, I love this program.
