

What We're Doing

By Holly Lisle

On the home front, we've managed to cut our weekly driving miles from about 250 down to just over 100. We think we might be able to do better, though shopping for perishables (and being a long way from anything) makes it tough. At this rate, because we have a small economy sedan that gets decent mileage, we'll be able to fill up our fuel tank about once a month.

What steps are you taking to help get the country through this crisis? Share your best ideas.
