

Yesterday was a wash

By Holly Lisle

I spent the entire day on the run, and wiped out for the night at about 9:30 p.m.. Doesn't help that I'd had about 3.5 hours of sleep the night before, of course. But today I want to get a whole lot of writing done, and I have a nice long stretch of hours in front of me in which to do it.

And, to my cheerful realization, I have discovered that today I know where I want to go with the re-write. Maybe I'm almost out of the morass.
